

The European Peace Project (EPP)

A concept for Europe's renewal, self-determination and global responsibility for peace

Starting point – Europe at a turning point

The European Peace Project (EPP) is not a political party program, but a intellectual-strategic initiative, which aims to redefine Europe's identity and capacity for action. Its goal: Europe should no longer define itself through dependencies, markets, or power – but through its ability to create, mediate, and embody peace.

Guiding principle – peace as European sovereignty

The European Peace Project rests on one central insight:

Peace is not a state, but a skill.

This ability needs to be re-cultivated politically, economically, technologically, and culturally.

Europe should not become neutral in the sense of indifference, but Non-aligned in the sense of freedom of choice.

The EPP understands peace in three dimensions:

- Inner peace – social justice, participation, education, cultural identity.
- Structural peace – fair economic systems, sustainable energy supply, technological sovereignty.
- External peace – an independent, dialogue-oriented foreign policy that builds bridges instead of fronts.

The project does not see Europe as a hegemon, but as a mediator of a multipolar world order, which focuses on cooperation rather than confrontation.

Pillars of the project

Political and foreign policy sovereignty

- Structure of European Peace and Mediation Agency, which offers diplomatic mediation in international conflicts.
- founding a European Security Community with a focus on collective defense and de-escalation – independent of an outdated and dangerous NATO.
- Establishment of a European Peace Academy, in which diplomats, officers, lawyers and civil society jointly develop strategies for civilian conflict resolution.

The goal is a Europe as a global peace laboratory– not through power, but through competence.

Economic independence and equitable prosperity

Peace is inconceivable without justice.

The EPP calls for an economy that serves humanity and the community, not the financial flows. Core ideas:

- Structure of European sovereignty economy in key areas (energy, semiconductors, medicine, education).
- Promotion of regional production cycles and fair taxation of multinational corporations.
- Development of a „European Wellbeing Index“, which measures social stability, ecological sustainability and cultural vitality.
- Creating a Peace Innovation Fund, which supports projects that put technological advances at the service of peace, cooperation and resilience.

This creates a new understanding of prosperity:

Peace as an economic productive force.

Digital and informational sovereignty

The peace of tomorrow also depends on Information Peace ab.

Whoever controls communication controls perception – and therefore action. The EPP is based on this principle:

- Structure of European digital infrastructure (Cloud, communication, AI) under public control.

- Promotion of free, European media platforms and open-source technologies.
- Protection of digital self-determination as a fundamental right.
- Formation of a European Media Charter for Truth and Transparency, to counter disinformation, censorship and algorithmic manipulation.

The digital world must not lead to a new form of colonization. Europe should remain the place where humanity is the measure of technology.

Education, culture and identity

The EPP understands peace as a cultural task.

A continent that is unaware of its spiritual origins cannot shape a future. Therefore, this project demands:

- Strengthening humanistic education in schools and universities – philosophy, history, art, languages.
- Support of Europe-wide citizen dialogue about values, identity and responsibility.
- Setting up a European Cultural Fund for Understanding, which promotes cultural bridges between regions and religions.
- Introduction of an annual “European Peace Day”, which features local peace initiatives, art projects and discussion forums in all European countries.

This is how a new generation of Europeans is emerging, one that does not define itself through fear or consumption – but about spirit, responsibility and creative power.

Vision 2035 – Europe as a peace power of the 21st century

The European Peace Project is to become a real European movement and structure to grow up in a world where states, cities, universities, companies and citizens work together on the vision:

A sovereign, humane, non-aligned Europe – as a force for peace in a multipolar world.

Europe will not dominate the world, but they coordinate, moderate, connect.

It will not protect through weapons, but through trust and stability.

It will not work by exporting fear, but by setting an example of freedom and responsibility.

Concluding thought – The European mission

The European Peace Project is more than a political strategy. It is a moral self-commitment:

To think of peace where others fight. To uphold humanity where power seduces. To live memory where history is forgotten. Europe invented war –

It can bring about peace. This is not a dream.

but a decision.

The peace of Europe begins in its own consciousness.

And the European Peace Project is the place where this awareness is being reborn.
